When the player sends or plays a file to your system, only the first time it is successfully opened the file has been created. After this time, you can tell it to use the file again and it will reuse the existing file instead of re-creating it, even if it changed in size. To do this, the player has to be configured for that. If the file was already playing and stopped, the player will know the file is gone and will immediately change the file back to the same file used last time. 3D Tab @seacademo.com I'm not sure of this. I've never tried it and I use Audacity for probably 99% of my needs, but its worth a shot. If you try this search for a gstreamer-based version. I'm not sure of this. I've never tried it and I use Audacity for probably 99% of my needs, but its worth a shot. If you try this search for a gstreamer-based version. Thanks for the heads up. I tried those open source players but they are super slow. I used to use Foobar2000 but the audio quality wasn't good. I think K-Lite lacks VST plugins and Flaconator isn't cross platform. I downloaded Audacious but I'm not sure it plays files from network folders and their documentation on using them is awful. Seatbelt usage decreases motor vehicle crash (MVC) mortality risk by 70%. Though a statewide law mandating seatbelt usage was passed in 1989, a higher rate of seatbelt usage has not been seen in Michigan. A retrospective analysis of Michigan crash logs from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and the National Occupant Safety Board (NHSB) was conducted to assess seatbelt compliance, by current law and current law enforcement, in relation to motor vehicle fatality severity. Using the 1995 fatal crash data from the NHSB database, a new, contextual parameter was created representing the current law enforcement severity. Risk (OR) and confidence intervals (CI) were created for each crash level, representing predicted victim survival rates if the victim had
