Category: System A group of local men in Virginia are considering starting their own men's shelter for homeless veterans in their town. The local group of the Veterans Emergency Mission, led by Mark Finkbeiner, says they have enough men to run a shelter, but don't have enough resources for financing. Finkbeiner says the VA hasn't stepped up to help the group, so they are looking to offer financial support and a home to new veterans. "Most organizations that are putting on shelters don't have the resources to care for a very vulnerable client group," he said. "So we're really trying to develop a group of dedicated individuals and businesses who can support this concept." The group has only been discussing the idea for a month. Finkbeiner said they are starting by contacting people with the church and the county sheriff's office, and are looking for more people to join in. "If we have enough people to support a shelter, then we can support that next step," he said.
