Andrew Cuomo's proposed abortion clinic regulations and his promotion of the controversial " Reproductive Health Act." Cuomo's " Reproductive Health Act" would, among other things, prevent women from undergoing second- or third-trimester abortions in their own homes without the approval of an outside hospital. It would also require the state to create a "premium fund" to pay for abortions for New Yorkers who can't afford them, which he said could be "in the millions of dollars." The Reproductive Health Act was ostensibly passed by the state legislature in 2012, but Cuomo has stonewalled it ever since, first by refusing to certify it as passed and then by referring to the legality of the pre-viability mandate as "questionable." TRENDING: 'Greater shakings': Jonathan Cahn foresaw 2020 trouble, warns of even more The Reproductive Health Act has been repeatedly filibustered in the Assembly since it was first passed, and the Senate Democrats called the effort to include any local or state policies that restrict abortions in the Reproductive Health Act "an unacceptable affront to the prerogatives of local and state governments." In a statement, one of the people who attended the town hall in Mount Kisco noted, "This has been a huge embarrassment to New York because we have people like Gov. Cuomo spreading misinformation about this bill. They claim that if the law is passed, medical students will be learning how to do abortions on aborted fetuses." Another woman, who objected to the discussion of second-trimester abortion, mentioned that the abortions she has had so far in her life were for "unhealthy problems" and that she felt that not
